Synopsis:

Ig Perrish (Radcliffe) is accused of the violent rape and killing of his girlfriend, Merrin Williams (Temple). After a hard night of drinking, Ig awakens, hungover, to find horns growing out of his head; they have the ability to drive people to confess sins and give in to selfish impulses. Ig decides to use this effective tool to discover the circumstances of his girlfriend's death and to seek revenge by finding the true murderer.

We like it because:

Horns is a film that takes elements of horror, dark fantasy, comedy and romance and uses them to great effect to create a deliciously off-beat and often gruesome tale that demands further viewings. With colourful characters against the haunting Vancouver backdrop, Horns is as gorgeous to look at as it is entertaining and horrifying and features a mature performance from Daniel Radcliffe who, building on his starring role in Woman in Black, returns to horror and proves that he is one of Britain's best and most diverse acting talents.
