Synopsis:

Sara (Julia Stiles) travels with her husband Paul (Scott Speedman) and young daughter to a small Colombian town, where she takes over the family business from her father (Stephen Rea).

But the town has a mysterious past – somehow connected to the old medical centre where Sara and her family now live – and it's only a matter of time before the spirits of dead children begin to torment their lives. Can Sara uncover the dark secret haunting her family? Or is her own daughter doomed to become one of the ghostly children?

We like it because:

There's something classic and genuinely unnerving about Out of the Dark. With its tale of a sinister horror linked to the past, it's like Don't Look Now meets The Grudge meets The Conjuring – a real recipe for terror!

It's an inventive story, with a solid cast on hand to do it justice. Julia Stiles proves once again why she's one of Hollywood's most reliable leading actresses, while Oscar nominee Stephen Rea lends his trademark touch of class to the film playing a shady character embedded in the town's even shadier past.

Behind the camera, Spanish director Lluís Quílez shows he's one to watch in the genre. Using the striking Colombian scenery, he creates a creepy tension and piles on the scares – a film as stunning to look at as it is unsettling! And that's not to mention the central mystery that will have you gripped to the final horrifying moments...

Atmospheric, well-acted and guaranteed to send chills down your spine, Out of the Dark is a ghost story not to be missed!
