Gustavo Sorola (Ten Little Roosters, X-Ray and Vav, Halo 3)
Burnie Burns (RWBY, Code Monkeys, Halo 3)

Synopsis:

For more than a decade, the hapless, helpless and occasionally hopeless anti-heroes of the Halo universe known as the Reds and Blues have fumbled their way from one adventure to another.

They've survived aliens, Freelancers, evil artificial intelligence programs, and secret government conspiracies. But now that they have been shipwrecked in a mysterious canyon, they will have to work together to survive their greatest foe of all... Themselves. Yes, once again the misfits from Blood Gulch find themselves stuck in the most worthless piece of real estate in the galaxy, or so they think. When dark forces begin to align against them, they begin to realize there's a lot more at stake than just being rescued. And this time just to survive, they might have to do what they do worst... Fight.

We like it because:

Produced by Rooster Teeth and officially licensed by Microsoft, this sideways glance at the Halo-verse isn't just for the hardcore gamers – it's an ingenious skewering of action movie tropes, military bravado, and science fiction, casting its war heroes as reluctant cannon-fodder more likely to call in sick than charge courageously into no-man's land.

Now in its twelfth season, Red Vs Blue is not only one the smartest and most innovative shows around, it's also a pioneering force in "machinima" – the art of editing footage from video games with audio to create a movie or show. And we're also not the only ones to have taken notice. With almost 8 million subscribers on YouTube, the series has been a phenomenal worldwide success.

With Season 11 now coming to the UK for the very first time and the launch of the all-new Halo 5 later this year, there's never been a better time to sign up!
