Fast sell:

From the producer of Insidious comes this year’s most claustrophobic and nerve-shredding horror. Putting its own unique twist on the invasion movie – a heroine who can’t escape due to crippling agoraphobia – it soon turns the tables on the invaders to create an unpredictable and highly tense thriller. Masterfully shot and with gripping performances, this is an invasion movie like you’ve never seen before.

Key talent:

Starring

Beth Riesgraf (TV’s Leverage, TV’s Criminal Minds)

Jack Kesy (The Throwaways, TV’s The Strain)

Martin Starr (This Is The End, Superbad)

Rory Culkin (Signs, Mean Creek)
Joshua Mikel (Terminator Genisys, We're The Millers)

Director
Adam Schindler (feature debut)

Synopsis:

Anna is afflicted with severe agoraphobia, and her crippling fear of the outside world confines her to the safety of her home. When three men break in and invade her house on the outskirts of town, she is physically unable to flee, frozen by her phobia. But the intruders soon discover that looks can be deceiving. Within her home, Anna is hardly helpless at all... harbouring dark secrets and a deadly will to survive.

We like it because:

It's always exciting to see a new twist on a tried-and-tested horror formula. Intruders turns the invasion movie completely on its head, proving that looks can indeed be deceiving – once the story kicks into gear and the hunters become the hunted, Intruders is more suspenseful, inventive, and unpredictable than your average thriller.

With his masterful camerawork and effective pacing, Adam Schindler proves he's a genre director to watch, delivering near-Hitchcockian levels of tension – along with big terrifying shocks to make Intruders the complete horror experience.

There are also great performances from the young cast, whose realistic characters make the suspense all the more believable.

Original, claustrophobic, and utterly terrifying, Intruders is an invasion movie for the next generation. Will you have the guts to lock the doors at night?
